DEAD SURE.

Representative Swagar Sherley of Kentucky was talking in Washington about his amendment to strengthen the pure-food-and-drugs bill.

"We must make our laws against impure food and drugs impregnable," he said, "or a national state of ill health will be ours as certainly as—as certainly as—"

He hesitated, then resumed: "It reminds me of a story, a story about a Louisville maid-servant who said one day to her mistress: 'Might I have next Friday a week off, ma'am?'

"You'll get your usual Thursday," the mistress objected, "but of course, it's important."

"My fiancé is to be buried, ma'am, next Friday a week, and I want to go to the funeral."

"Your fiancé? Buried? Why I didn't know you had a fiancé, let alone that he was dead."

"He ain't dead, ma'am," said the maid softly.

"The mistress smiled and looked relieved.

"Not dead? Then, of course," she said, "you can't be sure he is going to die, no matter how ill he may be. None of us know when we are going to die. Death is the one uncertain thing. And yet you would predict positively the date of this man's burial. It's absurd of you."

"Excuse me, ma'am," said the maid in a low voice. "It ain't absurd. Jim's goin' to be hung."
